Introduction

Language World comes to London!

For the first time in its history Language World is being held in the capital and there couldn't be a more appropriate place or a better moment.

London, one of the most vibrant, multicultural and multilingual cities in the world, with over 300 languages spoken by its citizens and a proud history of welcoming visitors and settlers from all over the world. London, host to the 2012 Olympic Games, ready to share with the world its vision of a future where sport and culture unites races and fosters tolerance. London, the home of government at a time when there are big changes to education policy and the structures within which we work. So where better to celebrate languages and language learning and to discuss the big issues that challenge us today?

Our theme for this year's Language World is All Together - language teachers working together to improve their professional knowledge and skills, encourage more young people to enjoy and succeed in learning new languages, and to influence policy and practice.

At Language World you can catch up with all that's best in the world of language teaching. In over sixty sessions across two days you'll find passionate languages educators speaking on topics close to their hearts, leading practitioners sharing their latest ideas and resources, classroom teachers "showing and telling" how they bring their teaching to life. Language World brings us All Together: the policy-makers, the experts, the experienced subject leaders, the newest recruits, the old hands and the fresh young teachers - all working together to make language teaching even better.
