Eva Lamb: Mixed ability AND mixed experience classes: mission impossible?

King Edward VII School has more than 40 feeder primary schools, teaching different languages to different levels. The approach that the Languages Department at KES has taken to tackle the challenge of mixed experience classes combines a fresh look at methodology with more emphasis on cooperative and independent learning, and a change of focus in the content of what students learn. Language is no longer an end in itself but a means to access "Meanings that Matter", e.g. cross-curricular content (using CLIL methodology) and to develop Creativity and Intercultural Awareness.
