Our school has introduced differentiation in the form of support. All students are given the same work but we give differentiated support which means all students are seen.

Jim Anderson mentioned the Critical Connections handbook

<https://goldsmithsmdst.com/handbook/>

Handbook provides guidance on scaffolding including structuring projects etc. Also Bloom thinking levels etc. It's free to access. There's much in there that is of relevance to differentiation, but especially chapter 4 'Contextual Support through Scaffolding', pp37-42.

For Arabic specialists the handbook 'Language in Art and the Work of Ali Omar Ermes' also contains many examples of differentiated activities:

There is also a professional development resource related to this available at:

<https://www.qfi.org/resources/goldsmiths-resource-pack/>

The Polish through Art project (mentioned in Joanna's film) can be viewed on the HHCL zone of the ALL website.

I strongly agree about potential visual art art different levels, bringing in emotional and aesthetic dimensions and multi sensory. Addressing different ways of learning and importance of personalisation.

Other resources shared in the Chat are included in the folder for this event, with grateful thanks .
